Why get Rescue Certified?

In a diving emergency, a quick, cool and effective response is often the difference between a close call and serious injury. That's why we recommend Rescue certification as an essential course for every serious diver. Only by mastering a Rescue course divers can be fully equipped to recognize, prevent and deal with accidents. The course also covers out-of-water rescue techniques, including giving oxygen and managing an accident scene. More important, it provides in-water practice of rescue simulated "victims," so you'll have a chance to internalize your lessons. In a real emergency, you're more likely to remember what you've done than what you've read. Beyond learning specific rescue techniques, you'll become more attuned to the signs of stress in other divers and gain confidence in your ability not only to rescue others but also to rescue yourself.

This course will complete the academics portion of the PADI Rescue certification process. The required open water certification dives may be completed on your next dive trip (within 12 months).
